REVERSE LOGISTICS

Reverse Logistics is the backward handling process, from the final destination to the point of origin, of products and raw materials that have exhausted their life cycle.

Reverse Logistics (or return logistics) include:

- The management of returns and unsold goods
- The management of products and packaging end-of-life
- The management of waste from industrial processes

The management of returns and unsold goods normally involves the return of products and raw materials to the place of production or to third parties for their re-use or for sale on other commercial channels.

The management of products, packaging and industrial processing at the end of their life cycle is governed by specific regulatory provisions for the protection of human health and the environment.

Since we are registered with the National Environmental Registry (MD 406/98) we can handle, directly or through qualified and authorised partners, the transport of any kind of waste, even hazardous.
